

NENE NEWS

THE EXCLUSIVE SOURCE OF ALL THINGS NENE

Nene gazing, pondering the meaning of life

PERSONAL ADS

FLYING DREAM: To the Nene flying by the rainbow at Honopu Ridge this past Sunday, let's meet by the waterfall same time next Sunday.

STARTER NEST WANTED: Looking for a nest to hold 3 eggs through maturity. Fixer-upper ok, barter system as payment.

NENE NONSENSE: Youngsters protest the shortage, citing resource mismanagement

Ancestral roots cause agony

NESTOR NENE

Recent increases in funding for educational programs benefitting Nene youth has caused a rift in older vs. younger generational relations. As young Nenes are learning more about the ancestral roots of their species, outdated religious practices are being challenged with vigor. Resistance to Nene creation stories conflict with evolutionary evidence that Nenes are descended from Canadian Geese.

New development in fossil DNA identification support these theories. Nenes are thought to have migrated over 500,000 years ago, later developing morphological differences. These include padded claws, and less webbing on their toes. These changes help to navigate the rugged lava rocks found on Hawaii.

Recent concerns have arisen over lack of proper documentation of new scientific findings. Traditionally, historical documents have been managed by The Association of Documents and Other Random Things (ADORT).

Recent discoveries of scandal and lack of organization have caused widespread loss of faith in this association and a call for change. Separation may be necessary to preserve the dignity and reputation of ADORT.

Initial increase in funding for educational programs were intended to provide opportunities in a shifting climate, but this has backfired and caused significant elder distress. Many well-respected Nenes of middle age warn that escalating conflict could cause future budget adjustments from bitter elders in positions of power.

Compromise is not traditionally a Nene characteristic, but it may be the only hope to close the generational gap and continue to roam the islands of Hawaii in alliance.

Ohelo shortage

NED NENE

Local population is shaken by the recent shortage of the ohelo berry, a favorite of the Nene and supernatural alike. A cousin of the cranberry, the ohelo berry is also known for being sacred to the volcano goddess, Pele. Hawaiian spiritual leaders have been known to sacrifice the ohelo by throwing them into Kilauea volcano on the big island of Hawaii.

Although the purpose of the shortage is unknown, local populations remain confident that the sacred berry will continue its historical abundance. With the help of goddess Pele, local Nenes expect a timely and fruitful return.

KEEP
CALM
AND SING
A
SONG